

How long does a Thermage treatment take?

Including time to prepare the skin for a full face and neck treatment, most patients can expect to be in our office for about 3 hours. The actual Thermage treatment is likely to take slightly more than an hour.

How many treatments will you need?

Just a single treatment is usually enough to accomplish a nice effect. However, some patients may choose to have a second treatment - about 6 months after the first - for even greater tissue tightening. These are patients that were happy with the results of their first treatment and wanted even more of a change.

Who performs Thermage?

Several staff members have received extensive training by Thermage's manufacturer, and may perform the initial portion of your Thermage treatment. Dr. Berkowitz will develop your treatment plan based on your desired changes and may also perform the contouring passes in the areas where you wish to see the greatest change.

What kind of results can you expect and when will you notice a difference?

Soon after treatment, your skin can look smoother and more youthful as the tighter underlying collagen offers better support. Within 2 to 6 months, most people notice gradual results; however, many of our patients see results more quickly - though we choose not to over-promise. Whether you see changes immediately or slowly after within the following months, we guarantee (in writing) that you will be satisfied.

How long will the results last?

Thermage causes an immediate tightening of the collagen structures deep within the skin. Optimal results are seen within 6 months following just a single treatment but studies show the results may last 18 months or longer. This depends to a great extent on each patient's natural aging process, nutrition, lifestyle and avoidance of sun.
